Paul Boucher

Paul Boucher lists his top three priorities as mayor: to connect city venues by skywalks; to increase Green Bay's population by five to ten percent each year; and to make the city attractive to college graduates. The University of Wisconsin-Madison graduate says, "I have done extensive social research in social development." He'd like to change the environment to "eliminate deep-rooted problems" and bring diversity and opportunities to the city.

Patrick Buckley

Patrick who served as a law enforcement officer on the Green Bay police force for 15 years, has grown his Subway sandwich shop business from one store to 57 stores across the state since 1994. Buckley has served on the Green Bay City Council and continues to serve on the Brown County Board of Supervisors. His top three priorities are improving public safety in our neighborhoods, expanding economic opportunities for all residents, and rebuilding our city's infrastructure.

Eric Genrich

Born and raised in Green Bay, Eric Genrich is a graduate of Notre Dame Academy and the University of Wisconsin. After earning a masters degree from University of Wisconsin - Milwaukee, he worked as a librarian at the Brown

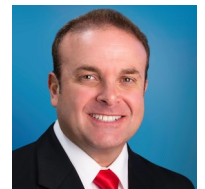

County Library. Elected to the Wisconsin State Assembly in 2012, he recently completed his third term. Eric is a member of Democrats of Brown County. He is married, and his two children attend Green Bay public schools. He says "the call to serve is what animates me, and it is what drives me to pursue the office of mayor." Eric plans to establish a master plan for restoring our crumbling roads and aging water infrastructure, to build bicycle and pedestrian infrastructure, revitalize parks and invest in renewable energy. He will work to bring new business development to Green Bay and, of course, end the futile bickering at city hall. Learn more about Eric at www.genrichforgb.com

Patrick M. Evans

A Brown County Supervisor for the past 16 years, including 12 years as chairperson of the Human Services Committee, Pat Evans is a lifelong Green Bay resident. He has a graduate degree in business and speaks Spanish and Portuguese fluently. In addition to involvement on numerous task forces, boards and civic groups, Evans states that he has a background as director, vice president and president of multi-million-dollar organizations. Joe Moore

Joe who is currently working as a Realtor, has previously served as an alderperson. In that capacity, he worked with the city's economic development team, something he hopes to revisit as mayor in order to build a tax base that will reduce the burden on Green Bay residents. Moore also hopes to improve the rate of infrastructure repairs and upgrades in the city.

Nick Mortensen

Born and raised in Green Bay, Nick has worked for his family business, Jones Sign Company, since 2011, helping to grow the business from one De Pere location to 15 locations across the country. As mayor, Mortensen would apply the data-based decision making that allowed the sign company to grow profitably to the city of Green Bay in what he refers to as the "smart city" approach. He explains this approach will reduce redundancies and allow smarter decisions to efficiently allocate taxpayer money.

Mark Steuer

Mark has represented the west side's District 10 on the City Council for the past six years, including service as the Council's vice president. His top three stated priorities are repairing Green Bay roads at a rate of 3.3% per year, working with the administration and City Council to develop a uniform citywide Capital Improvement Program (CIP), and to reduce debt to improve bond rating.

Guy Zima

Guy is a former Green Bay City Council Alderman (40 years) and Brown County Supervisor (42 years). He lost both seats in the most recent election. Zima has often clashed with outgoing mayor Jim Schmitt and has filed a defamation suit against the city and against the mayor himself. Upon leaving office, Zima was the subject of a code of conduct complaint which has since been dropped.
